HISTORIC SCENES IN OLD NEW ENGLAND

Scene of THE LEXINGTON MASSACRE

Lexington Green in Eastern Massachusetts, where British regulars first fired on American colonists, attracts hundreds of automobilists each day during the summer. Here on the 19th of April, 1775, a regiment of eight hundred British regulars dispatched from Boston by General Gage to seize stores of ammunition supposed to have been hidden in Concord by the colonists, were met by seventy provincials. Failing to disperse on command, the patriots were fired on by the British and sixteen of them were killed. This, the "Battle" of Lexington, fired the country and within a short time an army of sixteen thousand men had gathered about Boston, the first organized defiance of British rule in America.

Fine state roads lead to Lexington from every direction and every road has its historic points and scenes. Many of the original houses about Lexington Green are still standing and are still fine residences. The white house seen in the picture is the Harrington homestead at the doorway of which John Harrington was fatally wounded when Pitcairn commanded the British to fire on the assembled "rebels" expired at the feet of his wife.

The road from Boston to Lexington is over the original route of Paul Revere's Ride, "through every Middlesex village and farm" and from all parts of the country come tourists who react in their minds the stirring scenes of revolutionary times as they glide over perfect roads at speed and comfort never dreamed of in those early days of our country's history.
